Spain: The NATO Referendum	25 X 1

The referendum last Wednesday was a decisive vote for continued NATO membership 53 percent in favor, 40 percent against, and 7 percent blank or spoiled ballots. Only 60 percent of the electorate voted, about 15 to 20 percent below the level of participation in other recent elections.	25 X 1
Key factors in the favorable vote were:
Gonzalez's personal popularity. Polls had shown Socialist voters to be almost evenly divided, but a large number evidently decided at the eleventh hour to support NATO out of concern that a referendum defeat could weaken Gonzalez or even lead to his resignation.
Limits on membership. While anti-Western leftists agitated for withdrawal from the Alliance and Conservatives pushed for full integration, Gonzalez came out for a qualified membership. The referendum proposal rejected military integration, or any change in Spain's nonnuclear status, and called for a gradual reduction in the US military presence in Spain.	25X1

The referendum victory is a defeat for the left and will reinforce the momentum of recent years toward increased Spanish
security cooperation with the West.	25 X 1
It will permit Gonzalez to continue to quietly build
Spain's ties to NATO through participation in NATO political and planning committees.	25X1
Gonzalez's concern, however, with maintaining his domestic political position probably will make him reluctant to rapidly increase security cooperation with the West.
He is likely to shrink from placing Spanish forces under a NATO commander.
Gonzalez is also likely to push for at least a "cosmetic" reduction in the US military presence.
After the referendum he said publicly that Foreign Minister Fernandez-Ordonez would pursue this topic with the US Secretary of State in May.
We also believe that the Gonzalez team will almost certainly prove as tough as its predecessors in renegotiating a bilateral base agreement the
